Q: If-statement inside for-loop I am having trouble with the following code. I want that if the variable "moduleDir" contains /module1/ no problem. If /module1/ contains/module2 then "moduleDir" should be referred to "moduleDir" which is starting with /module2/ I think I'm completely off track as to what I want to do, any help is appreciated. #!bash if [-d $moduleDir] then for module in $moduleDir do for moduleDir in $module/ $moduleDir/ do $moduleDir done done elif [-d $moduleDir] then for module in $moduleDir do for moduleDir in $module/ $moduleDir/ do $moduleDir done done fi A: There are a few problems here. First, you're missing a bracket pair between the do block that's inside the elif block: if [-d $moduleDir] then for module in $moduleDir do for moduleDir in $module/ $moduleDir/ do $moduleDir done done elif [-d $moduleDir] then for module in $moduleDir do for moduleDir in $module/ $moduleDir/ do $moduleDir done done fi Note that the inner loop is inside the outer loop. I assume you were thinking that each $moduleDir in $module/ $moduleDir/ would also iterate over each moduleDir in module

What's New in the Photoshop 2021 (Version 22.4)?

We already learned two of the details of the upcoming 'Captain America: Civil War' trailer, but now we have a whole host more about the second teaser for the film. The new clip is a 12-second highlight reel and that not only has some glimpses of the cast, but also takes us deeper in to some key sequences from the film's first trailer. It could still all be very abstract, so these 'hints' of these new images are only that and not to be used as a confirmation. This invention relates to an article of furniture, more particularly to a box having an intermediate structure wherein the top thereof is detachable. The conventional box has an inner box and an upper box which are sequentially arranged vertically, such that all of the volume thereof is used to receive and store things. However, in order to save more space, an auxiliary box is utilized to receive and store things, such as a box containing batteries. In order to increase the utilization rate of the box, the entire inner box must be removed from the box body and the upper box is elevated so as to be delivered to the desired location. This arrangement is very inconvenient and even requires that the box body should be reversed. Accordingly, it is an object of the present invention to provide a detachable upper box for a box having an intermediate structure. The box body is made of plastic, and is composed of an inner box and a detachable upper box which is arranged beside the inner box. A partition is provided in an upper end of the inner box to form a space. The partition is arranged to a hollow upper wall of the inner box, and has a through hole which is formed in the inner wall of the upper box and can be detachably engaged with the partition. A retaining means is formed in the hollow upper wall of the inner box. Accordingly, the detachable upper box is detachably mounted to the inner box by a locating means. The locating means includes the through hole formed in the inner wall of the upper box, the partition arranged in the inner box, and the retaining means formed in the hollow upper wall of the inner box. The retaining means can be fully embedded in the inner wall of the upper box, so that the top of the upper box is securely and reliably fixed to the hollow upper wall of the inner box and can not be detached therefrom accidentally.
