The second half of this chapter was written during the Peruvian winter, and so it comes from inside a house with two windows, the first in which you can see the morning sun (blazing) and the other one shut (cold). The possibility of having two windows like that is that in summer the room becomes much brighter because the sun climbs higher and hits the tops of the trees, and in winter, the two windows warm the rest of the room. But in any case, the room never becomes so bright that you can't see the other side of the room. All three women kept their windows closed in summer to save energy, and their bedrooms in winter because they like to sleep with the window open. And yet we could see the snow and some time when it snows outside they always close the window. I stopped writing this chapter when I was 40 years old, because I was in Chile with Jack Nicholson and with a crazy, interesting group of people who knew how to live. A long section of this chapter in which I described a weird adventure with a colleague in Africa, but I hadn't written the story for two months. It took me 20 years to tell that story, and so it can't be in this book. Q: ajax success data I have an ajax call I am working on, and I am a little stuck on how to get my success data out of my ajax call.

now has a significant advantage in the race to be first-choice goalkeeper at the Allianz Arena. Team spirit is a common theme among the club's backroom staff. Bayern's goalkeeping coach Torsten Schultze (right) is working with Melgarejo and his deputy Christian Poulsen (left), a former goalkeeper himself, takes care of the physio department. Melgarejo was born in the city of Bilbao, to parents from the Basque region. He grew up in the surroundings of where his two grandmothers used to live. They have since died, but the club's academic department has placed a banner with their names in the stands at the Allianz Arena, so that Melgarejo can keep their memory close to his heart. It was in his hometown that Melgarejo joined his first football club, Athletic Club, aged eight, where he stayed for five years. He won the championship twice and played 12 matches for the youth side. However, at the age of 15, he moved to Sporting Gijon. After six years there, he made his debut in the first team in the second tier. In 2008, Melgarejo went to his 'home' club Athletic Bilbao. He made his debut in the La Liga for his home-town club, but he did not stay long in the Spanish Primera. In January of that year, he returned to Spain, signing a 648931e174
